

CATHOLIC THEOLOGY AND SCIENTIFIC CULTURE
Karl Rahner's Model

Stefano Visintin (Italy, Rome)

Our culture is now strongly influenced by natural sciences and their view of the world and so it's necessary for theology to deal also with them if it wants to have a cultural influence. About the possible models of relation between natural sciences and theology, it is normal inside catholic theology to refer to Teilhard de Chardin as an example to follow. But also another important theologians of the twentieth century, Karl Rahner, has something to say on this topic. He proposes a two-basic-level description of reality, with independent but complementary disciplines in continuous and necessary dialogue, that is probably what we need for the future.